I stood like one enchanted, and the chorus of triumph rolled on and up among the tall old chimneys, and floated heavenward. Suddenly a hand waved from that upper window, and a few words were spoken in German of which I did not catch the meaning. In an irrntant every torch was extinguished, and as silent as specters, the dark-robed figures moved away. It was all wonderfully impressive to me, and when I came to understand that one of their number was dying, while they, as it were, winged the parting soul with songs of triumph, it became doubly so. That makes me think, said Maggie, of the Sabbath school song they used to sing at Lakeville, -- Oh, sing to me of heaven, When I am called to die; perhaps that student felt just like that. Can you sing the Dies Irte, Miss Loring? inquired Dr. Castleton, taking his hat as if to reconcile his conscience for so prolonged a stay, and yet loth to depart. I should so like that as a parting benediction on this happy evening. I can. recall only a portion, and fear my execution will fail to please you, after the many fine singers you must have heard render it. There are no critics here, Miss Olive, said Mr. Bernard, and as your singing brought u8 the knowledge of this pleasant anecdote which the doctor has told, perhaps more singing will bring us another. The...
