In the progress of the Civil war, Mrs. Keller, finding that her stay in Memphis might continue for a considerable length of time through force of circumstances, set to work to improve the Overton Hotel hospital, and then organized the old State hospital, where the Dominican Sisters of the Catholic church were placed in charge. It is not possible in a brief sketch to describe the wonderful work of this noble woman in these and Work Of Mrs. James M. Keller 113 other hospitals during the gloomy days and nights when the pall of Southern defeat was gathering over them like a bird of evil prey. The courage of Southern womanhood was never more severely tested, and their heroic conduct never more beautifully illustrated than when they went forth at early morn from their own lonely homes to remain...
